

English Defence League

Rochdale demo

29 July 2017 - Media briefing

The English Defence League will be demonstrating with a march and speeches to the public in Rochdale on 29 July.

We are demonstrating about two outrages:

- Sexual grooming and abuse of English girls by Muslim men.
- Terrorism in the UK.

We are demonstrating about four aspects of those outrages:

- the causes of these outrages Page 2
 - the failure of government, politicians, media, churches and the bulk of opinion formers, decision-makers and influence-holders in civil society that enabled past outrages and is – as you read this – enabling the next ones Page 2
 - the failure of the Muslim community to accept ownership of the outrages Page 4
 - the culpability of the Muslim community in its shielding of terrorists and child abusers. Page 4
- We conclude with a note about the rape jihad Page 5

Why is the EDL speaking up in Rochdale?

To anyone who asks:

- “Why is the English Defence League demonstrating about crimes the police, politicians and media are already dealing with?”
- “Why is the English Defence League demonstrating when other groups have already protested in Rochdale and Manchester?”

We say:

- The feeble, irresponsible and craven responses to these outrages shows that more protests are needed, not fewer.
- In our democratic society street protests like ours are peaceful and legitimate ways to project a message. We make no apology for using all peaceful and legitimate avenues within our reach.

NOTE: The English Defence League is holding a series of national demonstrations throughout 2017 in England’s hot-spots of Islamification and “no-go areas” for non-Muslims. These will give heart to English people who, until the Brexit referendum, felt ignored and who have been intimidated into not expressing their deep fears for this nation’s future and the society in which their children will grow up. Our most recent national demonstration this year was in London on 24 June. See: <http://tinyurl.com/y9kwm3kl>

What are the causes of these outrages?

Firstly, let's look at the common factors:

- Almost all the perpetrators have Muslim names and a heritage from Muslim countries.
- Most of their victims are non-Muslims. Most are English, but Sikh girls have also been victims – since 1988.

Secondly, there is a straight line that can be drawn from the Koran through to the behaviour of the Rochdale gang.

In the Koran, Muslims are told they are the best and that non-believers are trash:

You are the best of peoples ever raised up for mankind. (Koran 3:110)

Jews and Christians are the worst of creatures (Koran 98:6)

Allah has no love for unbelievers (Koran 3:32)

The leader of the 2012 Rochdale gang, Shabir Ahmed, declared "We are a civilised society. We are the supreme race".

Thirdly, the straight line continues through the misogyny promoted and lived in mosques in Britain. There Muslim women are exhorted to be moral and pure. Imams contrast a pure Muslim woman with English women whose dress is deemed immodest, whose independence is condemned and whose behaviour is licentious. We know that in the Trojan Horse schools children as young as six were told that Western women are "white prostitutes".

So, what's the status of non-Muslim British girls in Muslim eyes?

In 2013 Mohammed Shafiq wrote a sermon to be read in all mosques in the UK saying that Muslim participation in sexual abuse of non-Muslims is a crime forbidden in Islam. In only a small minority of mosques was the sermon read. This was probably because most imams know that this is not a crime Islam forbids, but more than this, it is behaviour Islam condones in its references to the treatment of non-Muslim sex slaves.

Fourthly, the straight line goes through to the life experiences of Muslim men in the UK. They are faced with Western society that puts the lie to Allah's claim that they are the best of peoples. Muslim cab drivers ferry around people who are they are taught are their inferiors. Muslims serving kebabs to English girls know that these girls should be their sex slaves. English girls enjoy themselves in ways "good" Muslim girls can't - and yet they are not punished. Muslim men are bitter and resentful. They are motivated to set the world right, to take out their resentment on, for example, easily available kuffar girls.

Judge Gerald Clifton, summing up the notorious 2012 Rochdale trial said:

"All of you treated them as though they were worthless and beyond any respect. One of the factors leading to that was the fact that they were not part of your community or religion."

The failures of the establishment that enabled these outrages

By "the establishment" we mean government, politicians, media, churches and the bulk of opinion formers, decision-makers and influence-holders in civil society that enabled past outrages and is – as you read this – enabling the next ones

It is a situation which defies belief. These were public servants, who would not talk about child rape and prostitution, which they knew had been going on for years. They were not the rapists. They were not being paid by the criminals. But political correctness and multiculturalism had left them too scared to speak about these horrific crimes. No wonder these grooming gangs felt untouchable ... The tyranny of political correctness meant that they did not dare articulate or even acknowledge what they were seeing and hearing. ["Easy Meat", page 41]

The police deliberately gave the rapists of English girls the nod in 2005 that they'd be spared investigation. In The Betrayed Girls (BBC, July 2017) the narrator describes how the 2005 London Transport bombings stimulated rising "Islamophobia" which "the authorities" were determined to hose down because of its effect on community cohesion. Pulling back from Muslim Child Sexual Exploitation investigations was one thing the police could do to ease pressure on the Muslim community. The documentary does not reveal whose bright idea this was. An ethnic adviser to the Home Office, perhaps?

The police were the same across the country. West Midlands Police is a force that admitted in 2015 to burying a report on the sexual exploitation of over 100 girls to avoid the issue influencing the 2010 General Election. Yes: an English Police Force went along with the continuing criminal abuse of English girls on their beat. In Rotherham, there are over 50 investigations into alleged police misconduct linked to child sex crimes – in that one town. All over England police forces have admitted they made serious mistakes in the way they treated the rape jihad. But they are not admitting it openly; they have been using weasel words to tell us they have "upped their game", "improved their responsiveness", "given it our highest priority", "learned lessons" and other similar bureaucratic non-apologies to the hundreds of girls who were abused while the police sat knowingly on their hands.

Let's look at the media. In 2004 Nick Griffin exposed on BBC television all that needed to be known to justify a full-scale investigation into this grooming/rape jihad scandal.

<https://youtu.be/6uyU3dfd3pE>

Listen to the BBC interviewer Gavin Eslar in that video: Eslar does his best to ensure, in effect, that the rape jihad can continue without disruption. Nick Griffin, of course, was leader of the British National Party (a party explicitly critical of the EDL since our inception) and the establishment saw the BNP under Griffin as a threat. He could indeed have been a threat. So West Yorkshire Police and the Crown Prosecution Service worked hard to have him jailed, disrupting his public exposure for two years. Even today, there is almost universal refusal by the media to acknowledge Griffin's role in bringing the rape jihad crimes before the British public.

Another media example: Andrew Norfolk of The Times. Andrew Norfolk has done good work on this issue, but much of his achievement was due to his position on a respected newspaper. In the BBC's The Betrayed Girls Norfolk says: "To my shame I allowed my liberal fear about giving succour and credence to the British National Party to act as a brake on actually doing my job." Norfolk eventually trawled through media and court reports to compile an expose of the grooming gangs in January 2011. He also says in The Betrayed Girls that he took it on as his mission to claim the story of Muslim grooming gangs from the far right, epitomised by the EDL. The left at both the BBC and at The Times are committed to protecting their ideology far ahead of protecting English girls.

A third example: Child sex abuse by Catholic clergy cf. Muslim men. The media always connect child abuse with religion when it involves Catholics: but when it involves Muslims, the very word is taboo. Here journalists show their motivations: sneer at traditional British culture (like British religions) and protect non-British, enriching culture (like Islam). Instead of "Muslim", the deliberately vague and misleading term "Asian" is used to add a racial dimension to the discussion, while subtracting the opportunity to consider the religious dimension. Edgy journalists occasionally step beyond "Asian" to the awkward “of Pakistani heritage” or simply “Pakistani”. But even in 2017, the majority of reports of sex crimes revert to the timorous and inaccurate “Asian” - never “Muslim”.

The failure of the Muslim community to accept ownership of the outrages

We wrote on page 2 that the causes of the rape jihad lie in Islam. Sadly most Muslims not only refuse to accept the substance of that proposition, but contrive victimhood and offence when it is even raised for consideration. They demand no free speech or discussion of the issue.

The Muslim response to Charlie Hebdo - After Jihadists murdered 12 Charlie Hebdo journalists in Paris, Muslims invited onto the media tried to deflect from the primary issue of mass murder onto the secondary one of the cartoonists’ justification for mocking their prophet - as if questionable taste trumped a jihadist killing spree.

The Muslim response to the 2012 Rochdale case - In The Betrayed Girls,

- Ann Cryer (ex-MP) tells us that when Rochdale Muslim elders were confronted about the Muslim gangs, they said “It’s got nothing to do with us. End of story.”
- Mohammed Shafiq of the Ramadan Foundation says “There is nothing, absolutely nothing in my faith, Islam, that justifies this type of despicable and evil crimes.” He adds “I was told I was bringing the community down by talking about these issues, and they didn’t want me to talk about this or raise these issues.”

The Betrayed Girls did not include:

- Shabir Ahmed, the gang leader, after telling the court that he often prayed to Allah, blamed the white community for allowing teenage girls to go around unsupervised, so that at a young age they were “trained” in both sex and drinking.

We should not become absorbed by the 2012 Rochdale trial, as there have been nine other rape jihad trials in Rochdale and a further eight in nearby Manchester. Across England there have been well over 100 such trials in over 50 centres reported in the media.

The culpability of the Muslim community in its shielding of terrorists and child abusers.

The cover-up of child sexual grooming by Muslim men – The media have reported on the cover-up by police, local authorities and even MPs. But the vigour of this media witch-hunt, anger and outrage is displacement activity. It’s a red herring to draw attention from the bigger cover-up: the cover-up by the Muslim community.

The Muslim community’s cover up of their child abusers – Far more of the 300 Rotherham suspects would have been tried successfully years ago if the Muslim community was not stonewalling. Only in Rotherham has there been a takeover of these cases by the National Crime Agency (Operation Stovewood), so only in Rotherham are the dimensions of the criminal activity made public. There is still a Muslim wall of silence. Those with inside information have been persuaded, intimidated or accustomed into protecting the criminals, actively or passively. Their cover-up holds firm to this day.

What does the cover-up look like? – Because of the scale and duration of the abuse, and the arrogant and boastful characters of the abusers, the abusers’ parents, siblings, imams, workmates, business associates, community leaders, aunts, uncles and other acquaintances (including their wives and children) must have been aware of it. Andrew Norfolk told us in The Betrayed Girls “In one tiny town it was even a generational thing there where they had fathers who had been doing this to the mothers of young girls who were now being groomed and abused by these men’s sons.” All these Muslims clammed up. At the very least, they asked no questions and looked the other way to protect their own.

The damage from the Muslim community cover-up – If there was no Muslim wall of silence, there would never – could never – have been 1,400 child sexual abuse victims in Rotherham. And 1,385 victims would not still be waiting for investigations of their abusers in the town to be completed. In the 2012 Rochdale case there were 47 identified victims, but only five of these, just 10%, were called to give evidence. Again, if Muslims ‘in the know’ had come forward, the many other abusers of all 47 English girls who remain free would have been brought before British Justice.

“What British Muslims Really Think” – In his Channel 4 program, Trevor Phillips told us that 39% of British Muslims believe wives should obey their husbands – so Muslim women are not inclined to expose their criminal menfolk, even for grooming abuse of English girls.

Nothing less than two Royal Commissions – Our nation and our future generations deserve two thorough enquiries, with Royal Commission powers to compel witnesses including those retired, even those overseas:

- one into the cover-up of that abuse – by other Muslims as well as by government officials,
- another into what motivates Muslim men to abuse English girls on an extraordinary scale.
 - This is not the EDL’s own idea. It comes straight from the Serious Case Review of the 2012 Oxford grooming gang investigation: “With a significant proportion of those found guilty nationally of group CSE being from a Pakistani and/or Muslim heritage, relevant government departments should research why this is the case, in order to guide prevention strategies.”
 - Why has this recommendation not been acted upon? Another cover-up!

A note on the rape jihad

The rape jihad has manifest itself in many ways in recent years. As well as the grooming/rape epidemic here in England, there was the infamous New Years Eve attack in Cologne in 2015-16, the treatment of Yazidis by ISIS (justified explicitly by quotations from the Koran and Hadith), the kidnap by Boko Haram of the girls in Chibok, Nigeria, and the behaviour of the abusers’ relatives on the final day of numerous rape gang trials.

Rape statistics from the Federal German Police put some hard numbers to the rape jihad in Germany. We attach their graph to this briefing. And note on the graph where native German rapists sit. Most of the cases above German can be largely explained by rape jihad.

The rape jihad is not EDL hyperbole.
